Combining the Best of Both Worlds
College of Communication & College of Information Merge

The College of Communication and the College of Information merged their respective programs on July 1, 2009. This merger is a strong step forward in ensuring that students will be armed with a unique set of skills after graduation. Although it is widely assumed that the primary reason for the merger is the highly publicized cut in educational funding, this is not the case. The driving force behind the merger was the knowledge that both faculty and students will benefit from the integration of technology and communication. The rapid growth of technology brings it ever closer to the field of communication, and the merging of technology and communication is happening on a large scale in the business world.

The merging of the Colleges of Communication and Information reflects this new business environment. Students are no longer truly prepared for the workforce if they possess skills in only one of these co-dependent areas. To further enrich their studies by giving them multiple perspectives of the relationship between communication and technology, students are now able to take electives from other programs in the new College of Communication & Information. The full impact of the merger will not be seen in the short term, but in time, it is hoped that the new College will “develop joint degree programs, certificates, online courses and programs and a unified academic community that helps spread ideas across academic disciplines,” said Larry Denis, Dean of the new College.

In the short term, small advances have been seen in events such as a joint Club Day, held on October 1st, and Career Day, which took place on October 15th. Both events hosted clubs and companies that would be of interest to students of all three schools included in the merger (the School of Communication, the School of Library & Information Studies, and the School of Communication Science & Disorders). Other joint events completed include: a joint Faculty retreat; a combined United Way Campaign; the meeting of the joint Leadership Board; grants written by faculty from the newly created College; the Annual Convocation and Faculty awards; and a holiday luncheon. With more events hosted by the College of Communication & Information, students will be given more opportunities to expand their interests, and to see that communication, information, and technology are interconnected.

Success of Arrowhead Advertising

Arrowhead Advertising is Florida State University’s student-run advertising team, and competes at the National Student Advertising Competition (NSAC) annually. Arrowhead is primarily composed of students from the College of Communication & Information, and is under the faculty sponsorship of Barry Solomon. Each year, Arrowhead team members develop an integrated marketing campaign, including a 32-page plan book and a 20-minute presentation outlining the various facets of the marketing campaign, from research and media plans to creative and promotional executions. Arrowhead has a long history of success at NSAC. The team has placed first at the 4th District competition for the past three years, and has moved on to the national competition 7 out of the past 11 years.
Grad Student Wins Inaugural McKay Scholarship

Ania Rynarzewska, College of Communication & Information graduate student and former FSU tennis player, and Brian Brunner, a former quarterback at Central Michigan University, are the first ever recipients of the Jim McKay Scholarship. The McKay Scholarship is presented annually to student-athletes (one of each gender) who have excelled academically and who plan to pursue postgraduate studies in the communications industry. The Jim McKay Scholarship program was established in 2008 to pay import to the legacy of pioneer sports journalist Jim McKay, and to assist former student-athletes who plan to work on a postgraduate degree at an NCAA college or university. Rynarzewska will receive a $10,000 award for her outstanding academic achievements. Rynarzewska is pursuing a Ph.D in Mass Communications and Marketing.

Rynarzewska, who also received an ACC Postgraduate Scholarship, is a native of Inowroclaw, Poland, and was a member of Florida State’s SAAC and the National Society of Collegiate Scholars. She interned in the Sports Information Office and accrued experience with events planning, fundraising, and accounts coordination during her undergraduate years at FSU. She was named to the Atlantic Coast Conference Honor Roll and the All-Academic ACC Team between 2006-2008; to the Dean’s List three times; and to the President’s List twice. She was the Intercollegiate Tennis Association Scholar Athlete of the Year (2006-2008) and the FSU Golden Torch Award winner for achieving the highest GPA on her tennis team. She graduated Magna Cum Laude with a Bachelor’s degree in Public Relations. She also participated in food drives and various activities in the city and on campus while competing in tennis and going to school.

"There are no words for me to describe how proud I am and how happy I am for Ania in receiving the Jim McKay Scholarship," said Florida State Head Women’s Tennis Coach Jennifer Hyde. "Only one male and one female in the nation are awarded this scholarship each year, and for Ania to be chosen above a group of skilled and successful student-athletes speaks highly of the accomplishments she's had in her collegiate career at Florida State University." First in the Nation– Project Management Certificate

Florida State is the first and only university to offer a Graduate Project Management Certificate. This certificate is designed to teach students the Project Management Body of Knowledge that serves as preparation for those wanting to take the Project Management Professional exam. The Graduate Project Management Certificate offers a unique opportunity for students to slip into a niche in the working world. Those who complete the program will learn the skills to successfully plan and execute projects, thus adding to their professional repertoire a valuable set of processes, knowledge, tools, and techniques.

Students are not required to be a graduate student in the School of Communications in order to obtain the Project Management Certificate. A total of 12 course credits from the 4 areas of study in Project Management are required. For more information regarding the program, including how to apply, visit http://www.comm.cci.fsu.edu/Graduate-Programs/Graduate-Certificates/PMC.
On October 1st of this year, the College of Communication & Information hosted a Club Day to showcase ways for students to get involved on campus. CLUB FOCUS: Communication Graduate Student Association

The freshly revamped Communication Graduate Student Association (CGSA) is a student organization with the agenda of providing services, networking opportunities, and social events for students of the School of Communication and the University at large. Services range from Photoshop and video editing workshops to pre-exam tutorial sessions, information about research and internship opportunities, alumni relations, corporate office tours, and social networking opportunities. Look to join CGSA as it launches its extensive program in early January of 2010. For more information (including meeting times), please contact Zain at zk07@fsu.edu.
Distinguished Companies Recruit at FSU

The College of Communication & Information, AITP, and the STARS Alliance hosted Career day for CCI students on October 15th at the FSU Alumni Center. Twenty-seven companies from the regional area were present for the three-hour event. Around 300 undergraduate and graduate students attended the event.

From a brief survey with 11 employers 3 weeks after Career Day, companies reported: 362 resumes collected, 117 potential candidates, 35 internship interviews completed, 19 interns hired, and 3 full time employees hired. Employers enjoyed the setting of the FSU Alumni Center, and were ecstatic about the mixture of students from the newly created College of Communication & Information. Employers were quite excited by the prospect that students from the new College feature a wide range of skills from the technology and communication fields.

AITP and STARS would like to acknowledge the support of Dean Larry Dennis in making this a successful event. The groups would like to thank the Alumni Center for its generous space and cooperation. A similar event is planned for the spring, and will be hosted by both College and student groups. The goal for the spring event is to invite 40 local and regional companies specializing in IT, information studies, communication, and communication disorders.

Film Students Dominate Competition

Florida State University film students gathered with the top six film schools in the nation to compete in the second annual Filmanthropy competition. The Filmanthropy Competition was founded by the John Templeton Foundation and it inspires young filmmakers to create short films about philanthropic organizations.

Florida State University students won an impressive $54,500 of the $75,000 in awards with a combined 39 award-winning films. "For our students to win the lion's share of awards is quite remarkable, mainly because they were all first-year undergraduate film students competing against older and more experienced student filmmakers from excellent institutions across the nation," said Frank Patterson, Dean of the College of Motion Picture, Television and Recording Arts (better known to most as the Film School). "We are quite proud of this very bright bunch of students."

The event was a testament to the substantial talent of the Florida State film students. The event highlights the students' passion for and dedication to supporting the Filmanthropy event and bringing attention to the charities that strive to make a difference each day.

Center for Hispanic Marketing

The Center for Hispanic Marketing Communication was founded in 2004 at Florida State University by Dr. Felipe Korzeny. The Center for Hispanic Marketing Communication offers a graduate certificate, the first of its kind among universities in the United States, and works with students and faculty to conduct research and to produce innovative resources to serve the Hispanic market. Dr. Korzeny is still the director of the Center for Hispanic Marketing, and was recently recognized for his efforts by being asked to serve as one of five distinguished scholars on an independent panel slated to review a portion of the 2010 Census Integrated Communications Campaign.

The students of the Center for Hispanic Marketing were also nationally recognized by Advertising Age, a source for news about marketing and media (http://www.comm.cci.fsu.edu/Newsroom/HMC-in-Ad-Age). The continuing growth of the Hispanic market speaks to a need for the marketing communication industry to address this unique niche. Students do not need to be a graduate student in the communications program to fulfill the requirements for receiving a Hispanic Marketing certificate. To learn more about the program, visit http://hmc.comm.fsu.edu/Courses-Programs/Programs/HMC-Graduate-Certificate.
Schendel Clinic to Receive $25,000 from Sorority

In October of this year, Delta Zeta Sorority at Florida State University announced the creation of a $25,000 endowment to benefit the L. L. Schendel Speech and Hearing Clinic of the School of Communication Science & Disorders. Delta Zeta has pledged to donate $5,000 each year for five years. Delta Zeta’s national philanthropic partnerships are the Starkey Hearing Foundation and the House Ear Institute, both of which focus on speech and hearing disabilities.

“This is a partnership that we have worked to rekindle over the past few years, and we are excited to have the opportunity to create this endowment with the FSU Foundation that will provide much-needed funding assistance for programs of the clinic,” said Dalisha Herring, Delta Zeta Collegiate Chapter Director, Alpha Sigma Chapter. “This endowment represents a significant contribution to the Schendel Clinic and will help support our clinical training and community outreach efforts,” said Dr. Juliann Woods, Director of the School of Communication Science & Disorders. “We serve clients of all ages and backgrounds with various types of communication delays and disorders, so a gift of this size will have a tremendous impact on the clinic’s ability to better serve the community.”

The endowment from Delta Zeta will help fund assistive listening devices to Florida State students with hearing impairments, as well as fund support group meetings for families of children receiving services at the clinic. Educational materials will also be provided to help raise awareness of the clinic’s services.

Zeigler Wins Teaching Award

On April 9, 2009, Mark T. Zeigler received the 2008-2009 Distinguished Teacher Award. Along with this recognition, he received a $7,500 stipend. Zeigler is a speech instructor in the Department of Communication and an adjunct instructor in the Center for Leadership and Civic Education.

Zeigler has worn many hats since he joined the Florida State faculty in 1993. He served for seven years as the Assistant Dean for Student Affairs in the College of Communication. Zeigler was also the summer director of the Study Abroad London program in 2004 and 2005, and concurrently taught a number of courses full time. In the Center for Leadership and Civic Education, Zeigler helps train students to learn how to become effective leaders and responsible citizens of society.

“I've never had a teacher so passionate about what he does, and it makes me want to ... be passionate about whatever it is I want to do,” one student wrote of Zeigler. Another described Zeigler as "probably the most inspiring, helpful and enthusiastic professor I've had at FSU. He was always there when I needed help in class, and he genuinely cares about his students." For the full article, please visit http://www.comm.cci.fsu.edu/Newsroom/Zeigler-Top-Teacher.
